Testimonials

Clayton B. » (2014 ADAAP IOP Graduate)

I was so impressed with how loving & caring everyone was. I could open up & be honest without being judged. I could be myself. I felt nothing but caring & acceptance. Dan Davey's advice really helped me. He told me to listen & stop talking! I was so surprised at what I learned.

Without a doubt, hands down, ADAAP is the finest IOP rehab in all of Austin! Their staff is first class & their curriculum provides clients the tools to deal with their recovery & relapse prevention! ADAAP counselors help participants to openly examine themselves & their life choices, so they can be healed! I thoroughly recommend this awesome place!

Amy M.

Ten years ago this month I reached out to ADAAP for help with my problem with Alcohol. My ADAAP counselor took a very personal approach. She challenged me to get sober & encouraged me when I felt overwhelmed. ADAAP was instrumental in my facing & understanding my disease. I've had over a decade of sobriety, largely because of the support, guidance & first steps I got from the staff at ADAAP!

Tiffany M. » (2014 ADAAP IOP Graduate)

This program definitely works. It helped me not only how to stay sober but to want to stay sober. Hearing everyone gave me an insight as to where I want to be.

Amanda A.

This program helped me to look at the parts of my life I was ignoring & refused to see. Once I recognized & accepted these situations, I started doing the healing & recovery work!
Thank you ADAAP.

This Is the Only Day We Have!

It's only when we truly know and understand that we have a limited time on earth - and that we have no way of knowing when our time is up, we will then begin to live each day to the fullest, as if it was the only one we had.

Making Good, Honest Labor Better

(for Labor Day, 2017)

It wasn't that Kurt & I didn't have anything in common. We were the same age, approximately. The same height, give or take a few strands of hair (I still had hair, Kurt didn't - & my hair made me taller). We both cheered passionately for the same college football & professional baseball teams.

We were even the same weight. But even though we both tipped the scales at about 240 pounds, Kurt carried most of his weight in muscular arms, massive shoulders & a strong, powerful torso. I carried most of my 240 pounds...uh...well...you know...lower.

See what I mean? We had a lot in common - even though we were so different. The problem was, the differences between us were pretty divisive -- different religions, different educational backgrounds, different political perspectives, different lifestyles-- the kinds of things that don't HAVE to separate people, but often do, especially when you pile them up on top of each other.

The fact is, even though Kurt & I worked for the same company, we probably wouldn't have ever met had we not been thrown together into an adversarial situation. Kurt was blue collar through & through, & I was involved with his union in labor negotiations with the company. My collar was not only white, but I usually wore a tie around it. I didn't exactly sit on the other side of the negotiating table, but I worked for the company behind the scenes to coordinate communication efforts to employees, customers & the media.

To say there was a certain amount of tension around the company during the period of labor negotiations is like saying there is a certain amount of tension these days around Congress & the White House. So the timing wasn't right for a new friendship to take root. But as Kurt & I interacted during the course of the weeks of negotiation, we found we could do so pleasantly, if not completely comfortably. He had a gruff exterior, but a quick & affable sense of humor, & I enjoyed the give & take of our brief conversations. At first we limited our comments to sports. That led to the mention of our own respective athletic histories (his was impressive, mine was not). Which led to talk about our growing up years, which led to discussion of our families & eventually brought us full circle to the very subject we had been most steadfastly avoiding.

"So what brought you here to the company?" I asked. "My Dad worked here," he said, simply. "My older brother still works here. I never really thought of working anywhere else." "Do you like it here?" I didn't intend it as a leading question, but given the circumstances, it sort of came out that way. He looked at me, as if he was trying to decide if I was trying to trap him. I guess he figured I wasn't smart enough to do that. "Yeah," he said. "I like it a lot. It's hard work, but it's good, honest work. Good pay, good benefits. The company's been good to us."

I hesitated. I wanted to ask, "Then why are you & your union brothers trying to cripple this company with excessive & unreasonable demands?" I think he saw the question in my eyes. "Look, we all know it's a good company," he said plainly, directly. "But it can be better. that's all we're trying to do. We just want to make it better."

I think about Kurt every year at this time, when talk of Labor Day inevitably turns to a discussion of labor unions & whether or not they are still relevant in today's society. I'll leave that discussion to people who are a lot smarter than I am. But I'll always remember my experience with one devoted union member who sincerely appreciated having "good, honest work," & whose only desire was to make a good company better.

Which, come to think of it, is one more thing we had in common.
